Notification Trims, One Page

One rule, one table, and ten minutes. After this your phone speaks only when someone actually wants you.

PACING A single 10-minute sit-down, phone in hand on the couch. No need to be thorough — the table decides for you, so just march down it top to bottom.

The one rule: sound is for people. Everything else can wait in silence.

Trim by category

Category	Recommended setting	Done
Social apps	All off except direct messages from real people. No likes, no "trending".
Shopping	Everything off. Sales will still find you when you open the app on purpose.
Games	Everything off, including "your energy is full!". Play when you want, not when pinged.
News	Off, or one digest per day at most. Breaking news is not usually breaking.
Banking & travel	Keep security alerts and traveling statuses only. Turn off marketing nudges.
Messages from people	Keep banners and sounds. This is the one channel that gets to be loud.
Calendar & alarms	Alerts for real commitments only. Reminders you actually set: keep. Anything the app invents: trim.

The lock-screen test

- [ ] Only two apps may show badge dots. Choose them: _____ _____
- [ ] Set a Do Not Disturb window today: from _____ to _____. (Sleep counts. "Quiet dinner" counts even harder.)
- [ ] The test: your lock screen should show things a friend would text you, not another lunch-order coupon. If a notification fails the test, trim its app now rather than waiting for next month.

Done looks like: a phone that buzzes for people and goes quiet for everything else. Notice how much longer your battery lasts without even trying.
